Editor's Box

When a small group gathered at the UBC campus on Fairview slopes in 1917 to form the Alumni Association, they had two things in mind. Their first was to stay together. They had all finished their degrees and were busy tending to the needs of a growing, bustling city. But they missed the camaraderie of the classroom (crowded though it was), the late evening discussions, the stimulation.

They formed an association to stay in contact with each other. It gave them a sense of belonging, a sense of permanence.

The other reason was to stay in touch with their university. They were interested in maintaining and supporting a place that had shaped their lives.

The Association is huge now, with over 100,000 grads, and the intimacy is gone. But the feelings for UBC remain the same. Grads still want to see their old classmates, and they are still interested in what the university is up to.

Things have changed, though. The modern university is no longer the clubby, tweedy, ivy-clad place of dim memory. It's a fast-moving, high powered institution with a passion for first place. Funding at the modern university has also changed. Governments haven't the money to spend on the kind of growth a university needs, and private companies and individuals are being called on to fill the gap.

Organizations like the Alumni Association are changing, too. Our function vis à vis the university is in question: how do alumni associations fit into the new university and, specifically, into its fundraising needs. The subject is being discussed on campuses all over North America. UBC is no exception.

This issue brings you comment on the question and asks for your comments. The article begins on page 14.

We occasionally get letters to the editor, and we occasionally print them. Recently we decided to feature such letters more prominently. We are interested in what you think about this magazine or about any topic having to do with UBC. We'll publish criticism as well as praise, though the latter only blushing.

We hope you enjoy this issue.

Chris Petty, editor

Heppner Sings at the Met

UBC grad and international opera star Ben Heppner will sing at the Metropolitan Opera in December. He will sing the title role in Mozart's Idomeneo, replacing Luciano Pavarotti who had to drop out due to scheduling conflicts.

Heppner, whose final performance December 21 will be broadcast live by CBC Stereo, received the Alumni Association's Outstanding Young Alumnus Award in 1990. He has had an extremely successful year, and is considered one of the finest of a new generation of heroic tenors on the operatic circuit. Bravo, Ben.

Alumni Directory in Production

Production of the 1992 Harris Directory of UBC Alumni is underway. The directory will be ready for distribution in the Spring of 1992, and will include information on those men and women who have graduated from UBC, and who have chosen to have their names included.

Some grads have questioned the use of an American company to produce the Directory. Unfortunately, there is no Canadian company able to produce such a directory. Bernard C. Harris, founder of the company, was born and raised in Vancouver. The company is still family owned and operated, although it is based in the U.S. Harris has produced directories for McGill, Queen's, the University of Toronto, and the University of Regina among others. All printing and binding of the Directory will be done in Canada.

The Directory will only be available in book form. No data base version will be sold, so grads can rest assured that they will not receive a deluge of junk mail after the Directory is released.

If you haven't received a questionnaire and want to be included in the directory, call the Association as soon as possible and we will send you a form.

The Association tries as much as possible to offer goods and services produced by Canadians. In many cases, however, either no Canadian company exists to offer the service, or, if one does exist, it cannot deliver the service adequately to an organization as large as ours.

Nominations Sought for Alumni Board

Ballots and nominees for next year's Board of Directors will be included in the Spring Chronicle. The Senior Vice-President, Treasurer and three Members-At-Large will be elected.

The Senior VP serves for one year then becomes President for a one year term. The Treasurer serves for one year and Members-At-Large for two years.

Any UBC grad is eligible to run for office. If you are interested in running for any of these positions, please send us your name, address, degree and year of graduation, and a short statement about why you wish to serve. The nomination must be accompanied by the names and signatures of five nominators who are also grads of UBC. If you have any questions about these positions, please call the Association offices at (604) 822-3313.

The deadline for nominations is 4:00 pm Thursday, February 6, 1992. Send nominations to: The Returning Officer, 6251 Cecil Green Park Road, Vancouver, B.C., V6T 1Z1.

Affinity Card Big Success

Over 2,800 grads and friends of UBC are using their affinity credit cards to charge their way through life. The cards are offered exclusively through The Chronicle and are meant to give members a break on credit charges and give the Association a small amount of money each time the card is used. Both the card holder and the Association benefit. The bank, of course, collects the interest.

So far, affinity credit card use has raised more than $22,000 for the Alumni Association. Money raised is used to enhance reunions, divisions and branches activities. Every time you use your card, you're helping us serve you better. An application form for the UBC Alumni card is included in this issue.

UBC Ranks High

In a special report on universities published in Maclean's magazine in October, UBC ranked seventh in overall points compared with 46 other Canadian universities.

UBC scored high points in non-medical research grants per professor (UBC ranked #7), operating budget per student (#5), and was rated #4 when university president's were asked to rank the top schools in the country. UBC fell down in such areas as the GPA for 1st year students (#31), the percentage of faculty with PhDs (#34), and the percentage of foreign and out-of-province students who attend (#33). UBC also ranked high in scholarships and bursaries per student (#13), residence spaces per student (#14), and the student teacher ratio (#18).

Four of the top rated schools were in the west, six in Ontario, four in Quebec and 6 in the Maritimes. McGill, Queen's, Mount Allison, U of T, McMaster and Acadia were ranked the top six universities in the country.

The survey rated secular universities with broad based programs, and limited data to include undergraduate arts and sciences programs only. Religious, professional, agricultural or graduate schools were not considered.

Recycling Revisited

Soon after the item in the last issue concerning recycled paper for The Chronicle, we were contacted by our printer who told us our info was a month or two out of date. The fact is, glossy recycled paper is indeed now available for magazines such as this.

We use glossy paper because it is not too expensive and because it takes colour well. Cheaper, uncoated paper tends to absorb and spread ink, especially on the high speed presses we use. Glossy paper made out of recycled products solves this problem, but creates another. Cost.

To produce the 95,000 magazines we deliver costs $25,000+ per issue, not including mailing (which costs about the same amount). Because relatively few magazines use recycled glossy paper yet, it costs more. For us, about $2,000 more. As you know, we have had to cut our production from 4 to 3 issues per year because of budget restraints. Every time we increase costs, we have to decrease the number of pages we can offer you, the reader. We have been trying to increase our budget by selling more advertising space but, as anyone in the ad game will tell you, selling closed circulation quarterlies to advertisers is not an easy job. So we're stuck.

But it is a serious problem, and one we are committed to solving. Our options are to cut the number of pages we print, limit our circulation, raise more money or change to an uncoated paper stock. The first three are either disagreeable or unpredictable. Changing our paper stock means changing our magazine. That seems the best alternative.

The Association celebrates its 75th year of operation in 1992. We are planning a special, celebration issue for the Fall of 1992. That issue will introduce a new design to the magazine and a solution to the recycled paper problem. One way or another, we will be using recycled paper by that issue.

75 Years of Alumni Service

Seventy-five years ago next May, a handful of recent grads got together at UBC's old campus on the Fairview slopes and formed an alumni association. In 1992, the Association will celebrate with special events throughout the year and a commemorative issue of The Chronicle in the fall. For the next year, we will also be using a new crest on our stationery to remind everyone that it is a celebratory year. All our stationery, by the way, is produced on recycled paper and is fully recyclable.

Here is a preview of the new crest.

Alumni Board of Governors Appointees

Two grads were recently recommended by the Association for membership to the Board of Governors. Members are appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council.

Barbara Crompton BEd'72 was appointed to the Board of Governors in September 1990. She established The Fitness Group in 1978 and is president of BC's Health Systems Group, a company that manages exercise, stress and nutrition programs exclusively for corporate clients.

She was on the task force committee to create and implement a provincial registration and training program for fitness instructors, and she served as the Canadian representative on an international organization for fitness professionals.

Last year Crompton received the UBC Alumni 75th Anniversary Award of Merit, and in 1984 she was honoured with the Award of Merit from the British Columbia Parks and Recreation Association.

Michael A. Partridge BCom'59 was recently appointed to Board. He has been active in the Alumni Association for many years, and served as the president (1983-84) and vice president (1982-83). He was also president of his alumni division (Commerce) and was active in official roles in his fraternity's alumni organization.

In 1987 he won the Blythe Eagles Volunteer Service Award. The year preceding that he was co-chairman of the David Lam Management Research Endowment Fund, Faculty of Commerce and Business Administration.

His term on the UBC Board of Governors also ends in 1993.

Homecoming Recap

Many divisions were active during Homecoming, September 26 - 29th, organizing special events for alumni and students alike. Here's a brief recap:

P.E. and Rec division hosted an Open House and conducted tours of the War Memorial Gym's lab facilities.

Pharmacy held their annual Professional Practice Night, including over 100 pharmacists from various disciplines and more than 200 students in the session.

Social Work division opened Graham House, giving alumni an opportunity to bid the old building farewell before the School moves out in 1992. Those attending enjoyed historical displays chronicling Social Work pioneers.

The Geography Alumni Alliance held a combined AGM and Barbecue. The afternoon was enjoyed by all 50 attendees.

Rehabilitation Medicine attracted a small but enthusiastic crowd for the Rehab Medicine Broomball Challenge held September 28. Students and alumni had a chance to get together over a cup of hot chocolate afterwards.

Nursing held its Homecoming Brunch September 29 at Cecil Green Park. Guest speaker was Alison Taylor, who addressed the topic of mentoring nurses.

The School of Community and Regional Planning invited alumni, students and faculty to their barbecue held September 28. This event was also the initial social gathering in 1991 for the division's very successful mentor program.

Other Divisions News

Medical Alumni held the annual Doctor's Golf Tournament September 12, 1991 at the University Golf Club. Over 40 people participated in the tourney, which was followed by a dinner at the Club.

The Commerce division sponsored a Welcome to Downtown reception on October 8, 1991. Seventy people attended, including many recent grads new to the corporate scene.

Nursing got together October 17 for a Nursing Potluck Dinner to honour this spring's alumni award winners. Forty people attended including faculty & alumni from many years. The annual Alumni Grad Lunch will be held at the School's Faculty Lounge on January 16, 1992. The luncheon is free to all alumni. Just bring a plate of sandwiches or cookies to share!

Professors Emeriti: The division held an extra general meeting to discuss constitutional reform in Canada. The November meeting featured Ms. Rosalie Tizya, who spoke on Native land claims.

The division persuaded the UBC administration to review its policy regarding employment of retired professors. In circumstances where departments cannot otherwise find suitable individuals with appropriate expertise, retired professors can be given limited appointments. The division has received confirmation that it will be one of the constituent groups to be given space in Koerner House following renovation.

The Law Alumni division is holding a series of breakfast meetings with distinguished speakers. 1962 UBC law grad and Supreme Court Judge Mr. Justice Frank Iacobucci addressed 200 alumni at the first breakfast, held on May 24, 1991 at the Hotel Vancouver.

At the second breakfast, held on October 21, 1991, 100 welcomed 1973 UBC law grad and dean of the UBC Law School, Lynn Smith. Breakfasts will be held quarterly.

Social Work Division's AGM on October 24 featured a panel of Social Work alumni who are well-known in other fields: Darlene Marzari, politician; Don Morrison, lawyer; and Betty Backman, community volunteer. They discussed connections between their current activities and their earlier social work education.

Great Trekker Dinner

The winner of the Great Trekker Award for 1991, Rosemary Brown, was honoured at a dinner on September 26 at the Student Union Building. Presented annually by the Alma Mater Society, this award recognizes a UBC graduate who has achieved eminence in his or her chosen field, made a special contribution to the community and shown a keen and continued interest in UBC by rendering particular service to undergraduates. Over 150 students, alumni, friends, colleagues and admirers attended.

Present at the dinner honouring Rosemary Brown were seven of the original Great Trekkers, l-r: Gertrude Langridge BA '26, MA '66; Isobel (Barton) Morrison BA '26; Mary Lade BA '26; Harriet (Stephens) Aylwin BA '28; Anne (MacKenzie) Stevenson BA '27, Mary (McKee) Selby BA '26 and Grace (Noble) Wallace BSc(Agr) '28.

attended the event, and paid tribute to three retiring faculty members. Alumni were treated to a presentation by the school director on plans for the new school building. This was the last AGM to be held in Graham House.

Mentor Programme

The Mentor Programme is underway. On September 11, eighteen mentors-to-be attended an orientation meeting at Cecil Green Park. This programme introduces alumni to students interested in investigating certain careers, and in getting help starting those careers. Sylvia Palmer and Margot Bradbury of the Student Counselling & Resources Centre provided information and fielded questions.

This pilot project will be expanded in 1992. If you are interested in registering to be a mentor, or just need information, please call our office at 822-3313.

Reunions

During 1991, reunions marked everything from the 5th to the 60th anniversary years. Alumni travelled from such diverse locations as Antofagasta, Chile and Portumna, Ireland to join their classmates for dinner, a campus tour or a weekend of shared activities. Each was a unique event, planned with the help of our Programmes Department. Are there classmates you long to see? Old memories you want to share? Interested in what the old alma mater is up to (and what it looks like)? If you want some help to plan your own sentimental journey, call the Association offices at 822-3313.

The Class of '41 celebrated their 50 years as alumni on September 27 & 28 with a dinner held at the Faculty Club and a campus bus tour with lunch following at Cecil Green Park. It was a smashing success and everyone agrees that 5 years is too long to wait for the next one! An Alaska cruise is being investigated as the next class activity.

The Class of '31 returned to the campus on September 6 for a lunch at the Botanical Gardens and a bus tour to familiarize them with the many changes that have taken place on campus over the past 60 years. Concluding the afternoon was a reception hosted by Dr. & Mrs. Strangway at their home, Norman McKenzie House.

Class of '56, Commerce Production Option, Sept. 14 and 15.

Class of '61 Pharmacy at the Faculty Club, April 19

Trekkers Remember the Great Trek

Forty-nine of those hardy souls who trudged up to Point Grey in 1922 to clamour for their university gathered for lunch at Cecil Green Park during Homecoming. Joan Webster, BRE'80 chaired the event. A highlight was the launch of Sherwood Lett: His Life and Times (see ad page 37). Above: Evelyn Lett and Association Executive Director, Deborah Apps.

Attention Members of the Class of '32

Please reserve Thursday, September 3, 1992 for your 60th Reunion. Details will appear in the Spring issue of The Chronicle.

The President's Branches Tour, 1991

This Fall, UBC President David Strangway visited Alumni Branches in Canada and the U.S. The purpose of the tour was to visit grads in far-flung places, and to bring them up-to-date on advances at UBC.

The tour started in New York City on September 13, 1991. Archie McArthur, Deputy Consul General, welcomed Dr. and Mrs. Strangway, Peter Ufford (V.P. External Affairs) and his wife Theresa, branch volunteers Kevin and Jane Rush, Alumni Executive Director Deborah Apps and over 30 alumni to the luncheon held at the Canadian Consulate in New York. Dr. Strangway addressed the group on the topic "UBC - Towards the 21st Century."

From there, the Strangways and Deborah Apps rushed off to Washington, D.C., where over eighty grads came to the reception at Canada's magnificent new embassy building. Branch representative Jay Brown acted as MC for the evening

A small but enthusiastic group of supporters turned out for Dr. Strangway's visit to Winnipeg on October 4, 1991. Deborah Apps, who also attended, reports that alumni are interested in how demographic trends are affecting the university's faculty and students, and the "Access for All" program.

Seattle

A contingent of hard-core turkey lovers gathered at the College Club in Seattle October 11, 1991 at a pre-dinner reception for UBC alumni. Among the guests were Mr. & Mrs. Richard Seaborn (BA '60), Consul at the Canadian Consulate-General in Seattle, and Great Trekker Dr. F.H. Bell (BA '24), accompanied by his wife Sara Amren (see p. 26 Fall Chronicle). Guests went on to enjoy a lovely Thanksgiving dinner organized by the Canadian Society of the Northwest.

Last game of the season between the Vancouver Canucks and the Los Angeles Kings will take place in Los Angeles on Saturday, April 4, 1992 at 1 pm. Bring the family! For $19 (payable in advance) you can join a wildly enthusiastic group of UBC alumni, all ardent hockey fans. Who you cheer for is up to you. We need 25 minimum to get this group rate. Please mail your cheque to Brian McKenzie, 67 Finca St., San Clemente, CA 92672 by January 31. You can call him at (714) 366-1617 (office). Or bring your cheque to the January 29 LA branch event (invitations will be mailed in the New Year).

The President's Tour Continues

Dr. Strangway came back to B.C. and took a whistle-stop tour of three Cariboo cities on September 20.

Fifty cheerful graduates arose early to hear Dr. Strangway speak at an alumni breakfast held in Williams Lake. Despite the early hour, the group had many interesting questions for Dr. Strangway, focusing on enrolment and recruitment activities.

A very successful luncheon was held in Quesnel, with almost 50 grads in attendance. Dr. Strangway brought the group up to date on trends in education and on how UBC is adapting to the changing needs of the province.

The last event of the day was an alumni reception in Prince George, where almost 200 grads gathered to meet Dr. Strangway. Guests had an opportunity to view the video "Building UBC's Future," and to ask questions. Special guests were Class of '27 grads Hubert and Katherine King.

Another 2-event day for Dr. Strangway, UBC's Dean of Arts Patricia Marchak and Deborah Apps took place October 7, 1991, when the trio travelled to Penticton and Kelowna. More than 30 grads gathered for lunch at the first-ever Penticton branch event, and 80 attended the reception in Kelowna. Interested in helping to organize further branch activities for this area? Contact Jeff Peterson at 861-4022.

More than 35 early risers attended an alumni breakfast held in Campbell River on October 10, 1991. Dr. Strangway addressed the group on the topic "Building UBC's Future," and fielded questions on UBC's affordability and the student acceptance rate.

Branches

The Hong Kong Branch of the UBC Alumni Association held its Annual General Meeting on June 21, 1991 aboard the Sunshine III. Dr. Anthony Cheng agreed to stay on as president for another term. Other executive members include Wilson Wong (V.P.), Stephen Shih (V.P.), Lisa Yue (Sec.), Allen Mak (Treas.), Jennifer Yip (Auditor), Kevin Lee (Legal Advisor), and Pat Ng, Linda Mak and Josephine Lau (Public Relations). The group has embarked on a membership drive this fall. ● Gisela Ruckert

It is with deep regret that we advise of the sudden passing of Dr. Hiroki Tsukamoto, Postdoctoral Fellow of the UBC Faculty of Chemistry from December 1985 to March 1987. He and his mother died in an automobile accident on September 17, 1991. Dr. Tsukamoto was an active supporter of the Tokyo branch of the UBC Alumni Association. He leaves his wife and new born child.

Endowments Fund Research, Chairs and Scholarships

A teacher and student come upon a solution to a problem that had stumped them and others for years. An idea that didn't exist before gets jotted down on a blackboard or a piece of note paper. A researcher comes bursting out of the lab — elated — clutching the answer in his or her hand. With $80 million committed to strengthening UBC's research capabilities, the World of Opportunity Campaign is creating an enhanced learning environment that continues to draw outstanding students and faculty to campus and enables them to fulfil their tremendous potential. To date, more than 50 academic and community endowments in the form of chairs, professorships, centres and fellowships, have been established through the campaign to support the university's academic mission. Funding for endowments will support pioneering research, learning and international exchange of knowledge in such critical areas as health, the environment, law, business, ethics, science, engineering and the arts.

Several endowments have been named in recognition of UBC alumni who, as individuals and through their businesses, have made major contributions to their alma mater. They include:

- B.I. Ghert Family Junior Professorship in Finance and Policy. Named for the family of Bernard Ghert (MBA'66), the junior professorship is designed to help UBC compete more effectively in the recruitment of young faculty.
- Nathan Nemetz Chair in Legal History honours the commitment of Chief Justice Nemetz (BA'34, Hon LLD'75) to understanding our cultural and legal history. Nemetz believes only then will we be able to revitalize the country's social structure and institutions.
- Clifford H. Frame Chair in Mining and Mineral Process Engineering is named after Clifford Frame (BAs'58), Chief Executive Officer of Curragh Resources Inc. The appointee will work with other academics, industry and government to develop innovative technology to ensure that Canada's mining industry remains internationally competitive and recovers mineral resources in a judicious manner.
- Patricia F. Rodgers Chair in Applied Ethics is named in the memory of a UBC alumna who dedicated much of her life to the pursuit of knowledge (BCom'45, BA'46, BSW'63, MSW'66). Issues of applied ethics are rapidly gaining international attention in such areas as bio-technology, genetic engineering, business and the corporate community. This chair and the Maurice Young Chair in Applied Ethics (Maurice Young, BCom'48, Hon LLD'90) will focus on ethics in the business community.
- Sauder Family Chair in Paediatric Infectious Diseases; Sauder Family Chair in Viral Diseases of Children. Named for the family of William Sauder (BCom'48, Hon LLD'90). The chair in paediatric infectious diseases will focus on how bacteria causes disease, with the aim of preventing infectious diseases through new diagnosis and therapy. The chair in viral diseases of children will foster knowledge about the basic biology of disease-causing viruses essential to the development of preventive and therapeutic treatments.
- Rick Hansen National Fellow. Working with the new Disability Resource Centre established by Rick Hansen (BPE'86, Hon LLD'87), the national fellow will provide an international advocate to act on behalf of people with disabilities.
- An endowment fund established through a contribution by Northwood Pulp and Timber of Prince George will create ten new scholarships in forestry, engineering and commerce. Four additional general scholarships will be awarded and for all of the scholarships, preference will be given to students who have attended a secondary or post-secondary institution in northern British Columbia. C.T. Hazelwood, President and Chief Executive Officer, said the company has many employees who are UBC alumni and the scholarships will enable Northwood to continue to benefit from the availability of university grads.

There are 31 academic endowments that still need campaign donations, including:

- Chair in AIDS
- Chair in Audiology and Speech Sciences
- Chair in Canadian Studies
- Chair in Geriatric Dentistry
- Judaic Studies Endowment
- Chair in Landscape and Liveable Environments
- Chair in Spinal Cord Physiology
- Chair in Plant Biotechnology
- Professorship in Nursing (Elizabeth Kenny McCann Professorship)

Raised in Ontario and BC on a volatile mixture of Scottish and Canadian nationalism, and fascinated by songs and stories of the past, Veronica Strong-Boag decided to become an historian by age six.

It took her longer to become a feminist, but her life-long fascination with history eventually gave Strong-Boag the opportunity to help recover the past of previous generations of women who had been almost entirely forgotten in her profession's preoccupation with the doings of 'great' men.

Today, she is Director of UBC's newly created Centre for Research in Women's Studies and Gender Relations.

"We are fortunate in being able to recruit Professor Strong-Boag as the centre's founding director," said Dan Birch, vice-president, academic and provost. "Few, if any, Canadians could offer as much potential for intellectual leadership in the field."

The main goals of the centre, established through the World of Opportunity Campaign, are interdisciplinary research in Women's Studies and Gender Relations, graduate education and community liaison.

"The creation of the centre, like the introduction of a major in Women's Studies and the appointment of an Advisor to the President on Women and Gender Relations, is a sign that UBC is making a significant effort to ensure that women, whether as faculty, staff or students, no longer face the chilly climate that must prevent any institution from achieving its full potential, whether in research, as an employer, or in teaching," said Strong-Boag.

She joins UBC from Simon Fraser University, where she held a joint appointment in the Department of History and the Women's Studies Program. In 1988, she received the Sir John A. Macdonald Prize for the best book on Canadian history awarded by the Canadian Historical Society. A year earlier, she was co-winner of the Laura Jamieson Prize, presented by the Canadian Research Institute for the Advancement of Women, for best feminist book by a Canadian author.

For Strong-Boag, success in the centre will mean a collaborative association of researchers, teachers and community activists drawn together by a common commitment to furthering social justice.

When Professor Ivan Head left the University of Alberta in 1967 to advise Canada's Minister of Justice, it was to be a temporary leave of absence.

After six years as a practising lawyer and three years in the foreign service, Head was anxious to continue the research and teaching career which began at his alma mater in 1963.

"I had intended to remain an academic for the rest of my life," Head explained. "But when the Justice Minister asks you to lend a hand, there's really no option. You have to accept."

Head stayed with Pierre Trudeau for 11 years, travelling the globe with the then Prime Minister, advising him on international relations and foreign policy.

This fall, the 61-year-old lawyer, diplomat and Officer of the Order of Canada returned to the West and academe. Only this time, it's to UBC.

His duties are twofold: to conduct graduate seminars in the Faculty of Law and Department of Political Science, and to attract attention to the university as a centre for international studies through the World of Opportunity Campaign-funded Chair in International Development.

Head will draw on his 13 years experience as president of the International Development Research Centre (IDRC). Founded 21 years ago by Parliament, the organization's mandate is to support science and technology research in developing countries. During Head's tenure as president from 1978 to 1991, the centre funded more than 2,000 research projects in over 100 countries.

"The future of westernized nations in the North is inextricably linked to that of developing countries in the South," he said. "I've been preaching that sermon for a quarter of a century and I intend to continue it. In my judgement, this is the issue. There is none other that approaches it in magnitude."

NOW FLY THE ULTIMATE.

As of December, Cathay Pacific's nonstop service to Hong Kong will include the new 747-400, the world's most advanced passenger aircraft. And our inflight service is provided by attendants from ten Asian lands, all dedicated to ensuring you arrive in better shape. With convenient Air Canada connections through Vancouver you can enjoy the ultimate flying experience to Hong Kong.

The Alumni Association in Transition

After years of family quarrelling, the university and the Alumni Association are finally coming to grips with the problems in their relationship. Will the Association
survive the outcome?

In the fall of 1990, the university and the UBC Alumni Association struck a committee to analyse the Association and how it could better serve the needs of the university. This Directional Plan Committee finished its work recently and has presented a plan for a new Association structure.

Why was this necessary? There are a number of reasons, all centring around the fact that the services the Association supplies are important to the university:

- The Alumni Association is the only UBC unit that speaks directly to all the graduates and friends of UBC. It communicates regularly through this magazine and division newsletters. It organizes branch events and tours, it markets goods and services to alumni, it organizes professional networking opportunities and it informs graduates about UBC. In the lexicon of the modern university, it takes nearly full responsibility for "friend raising" in the alumni community.

- It enlists volunteer support for the university. The Board of Directors, committee chairs, division and branch reps and event organizers are all alumni who donate time and expertise to running the affairs of the Association. Some of these people are asked to serve on university committees, and some are elected to the Senate or recommended as appointees to the Board of Governors.

- It actively engages alumni in the work of the university. It helps grads from various faculties set up mentoring relationships with students, and it is working with grads locally and in far-flung branches to recruit the best students for UBC.

Since these services are so valuable, they are reviewed periodically to make sure they are provided as efficiently and effectively as possible. The current review stems from more than periodic concerns, however. The relationship between the university and the Association deteriorated during the late 1980s, and the report of the Directional Planning Committee recommends sweeping changes in the structure of the Alumni Association to rectify the problem. The university, for its part, wants full control of those Association functions that, it feels, impact directly on its fundraising efforts.

Conducting this kind of review isn't as simple as it may seem. The Alumni Association is not part of the administrative structure of the university. It is a separate entity, founded by graduates in 1917 and registered as a society in 1946. It is run by a volunteer Board of Directors elected annually by the membership. Alumni Association staff are responsible, through the executive director, to that board and are not employees of the university. But, except for a small amount of money raised by marketing ventures, all the Association's operating budget (more than $600,000) is supplied by the university.

In theory, the executive director is responsible for carrying out the vision and direction of the volunteer board. The board develops policy and programs, and defines the editorial direction and content of this magazine. Volunteers head up committees (Communications, Reunions, Divisions, Student Affairs, etc.) and are responsible for the financial accountability of the Association.

But theories may break down in practice. The Association coordinates its activities with the university's External Affairs department. The Association's executive director meets regularly with directors of other External Affairs offices and the UBC VP responsible for External Affairs, and is expected, more or less (and in conjunction with the Association's Board of Directors), to work in concert with the goals and aspirations developed by this body. As long as there are no conflicts between the wishes of the volunteer board and policy set out by the External Affairs, everything runs quite smoothly. If conflict does develop, then the sparks can fly between the volunteers and the university administration.

In the past few years, some feel, the sparks have flown. Volunteers have insisted on setting their own goals for the Association, while university administrators have insisted that the Association tailor its goals to conform with those of the university. Many volunteers feel, as well, that the policies the administration wants to implement encroach directly upon the traditional roles of the Association. The Directional Plan Committee was convened to address the problem and settle the conflict.

But how did this difficult situation come about? Both parties have, of course, slightly different views on the history.

The Association

Recent history of the Alumni Association is closely linked to that of the Development Office, the university department responsible for fundraising. In 1986, a market survey was conducted to assess the potential for a major fundraising campaign. Fundraising at the university at that time was spread out across the campus. Faculties identified fundraising goals (scholarships, bursaries, chairs, etc.) in a more or less independent manner, with little coordination from the administration.

The most organized fundraising office on campus at the time was the Alumni Association. The Alumni Annual Fund appealed to each graduate regardless of faculty affiliation, and raised around $600,000 every year. In 1987 (its last year of operation) the Fund raised about $1.2 million. The executive director of the Association in 1986-7 was qualified as a professional fundraiser and was named UBC's Chief Development Officer, functioning in a dual role. It became his task to establish a Development Office and to coordinate fundraising during the planned campaign. One of his first acts was to computerize the alumni list and to transfer responsibility for maintaining it to the Development Office. Next, he was directed by university administrators to centralize fundraising efforts, requiring all faculties to work through the Development Office with their projects. By the end of fiscal 1987, all fundraising activity was assumed by the Development Office. In December, 1987, the executive director resigned and the administrative link between the Association and the Development Office was severed, but his resignation caused much conflict and reverberates to this day. Relations between the Association and the administration deteriorated significantly during this time.

Then, in 1988, the Alumni Fund was moved from the Association to the Development Office. As well, as the

The Directional Plan

The Directional Plan Committee was made up of members of the university administration, past presidents of the Alumni Association and Dave Coulson, Association president. Their objectives were to define the relationship between the two bodies, provide direction for the Association in the 1990s, and establish a model structure for the Association. Their recommendations will be discussed by the university's Board of Governors in January and, if approved by them and the Association's Board of Directors, will be implemented beginning April, 1992.

Current Model:

The Alumni Association is registered under the Societies Act and operated by a volunteer board elected by the membership. The board hires an executive director and a professional staff to carry out programs developed and directed by volunteer committees. Virtually all funding for Association programs is provided by the university, but it has no administrative authority over the Association's programs, staff or philosophical direction.

Decisions on program development are volunteer-generated. Linkage between Association programs and those of other university units (Development, Ceremonies, Community Relations) are then worked out by staff. Annual plans are developed by staff in conjunction with other university units, but these plans must be approved by the volunteer board.

Proposed Model:

The goals, philosophy and programs of the new Alumni Relations Office would be developed exclusively with the overall goals of the university in mind. All alumni activities would have service to these goals as their prime objective.

Association staff would become employees of the university, reporting directly to the administration. Program development and implementation would be the responsibility of the university. A separate Alumni Association, made up of the volunteer board, would have a mandate to advise the university on alumni issues and recruit volunteers. The Association President, Vice President and Treasurer would be members of the university's Board of Governors.

The report suggests that the executive director "could" be hired by the Association and seconded to the university to run the Alumni Relations department and to champion alumni views on behalf of the Association. This person would, however, report directly to the university on Alumni Relations programs. A third body, an Operating Committee made up of representatives of the university and the volunteer Association, would meet quarterly to discuss issues of mutual interest.

campaign strategy developed, Alumni Divisions were told to stop fundraising for their own scholarships and bursary projects. The Alumni Association's Annual Fund and Division fundraising were mainstays of Association activity, and without them, many volunteers felt, the Association had no real purpose.

It was a difficult transitional period for the Association. Members of the volunteer board were unhappy with the actions of the university. The loss of the alumni list was considered an encroachment on Association territory, but the loss of its ability to raise funds was seen as a threat to its existence. Over the next few years, university administrators insisted that the Association link its programs more closely to those of the university, and specifically to the campaign. The irony, for the Association, was that while it was being told to stop direct fundraising, it was being asked to gear its programs to support the fundraising goals of the university by cultivating the good will of its members.

Some senior alumni volunteers objected to what they felt was a takeover of the Association. Traditionally, independent alumni associations were

David Coulson, President

The President's response to the Directional Plan

The Alumni Association was founded in 1917 by a group of men and women who came together to provide benefit to other graduates of the university. Their idea was to organize events so they could stay connected to an institution that had shaped their lives, helped determine their careers, and toward which they felt real affection.

That simple idea has been the motivating force behind 75 years of service to alumni, and has been the reason why thousands of volunteers have lent their time and expertise to running Association affairs. That simple idea is in danger of being abandoned through efforts by the university to take over Association services.

The move to transfer services isn't an old one. In the past few years, the university administration has assumed maintenance of the alumni list and taken over the Alumni Annual Fund, atically shrunk over the past few years while the university has been asking us to provide more and more service. In recent years, for example, the administration requested that we enhance our Branches programs. They were disappointed when we mounted respectable but low-key events abroad. Because of the expense and our shrinking resources, we were unable to send our organizers overseas or to spend a great deal of money on the events. This year the university took over much control of the Asian Branch program, and sent organizers, fundraisers and administrators to meet with grads. The result? High profile, successful events.

The irony in this is that our services to members have increased in the past few years. We have had fewer staff at the Association since May of 1988 (when the Annual Fund was transferred) but those left have taken up the slack: Marketing revenue has increased, we process more scholarship and bursary applications and more applications to the President's Allocations and Walter Gage committees, Branch, Division and reunion activity has increased, as has the participation rate of most of our events. We have worked hard to respond to the university's ever-increasing demand for more service.

As well, we plan our activities a year in advance in conjunction with other units in the External Affairs department to make sure our services link with other university programs. These plans are always carefully presented and meet with approval, at the time, with administrators. Administration complaints about our productivity, then, is doubly surprising.

Because of resource problems, however, we have been forced to cut back support for our Division newsletters and to cut The Chronicle from four issues to three. We have worked with the administration extremely well, in my view, while maintaining the independence of the Association.

And yet the university's answer has been to assume management over more services and fund them properly. I would argue that, with proper funding, the Association would deliver a superior service, because fundraising would not be our only focus.

The Directional Plan (and others being considered by the university) will effectively eliminate volunteer control over the Association's business. This will result in mis-focused services to the membership and, in the long run, disservice to the university through an alienated alumni. In my view, the Association should be properly funded and, with its mission and purpose firmly in mind, left to conduct its own affairs the way it sees fit.

I invite you to comment on this issue. We will publish a selection of your responses in the next edition of The Chronicle.

"The Directional Plan, if implemented, will effectively eliminate volunteer control over the Association's business."

and is, increasingly, exercising influence over Branch and Division activities.

The administration's rationale for these moves seems to be that the Association is not delivering an acceptable level of service in these areas. In particular, they feel, the potential for fund raising during the current World of Opportunity Campaign is not being adequately addressed by Association programs.

I would like to state quite clearly that I fully support the campaign, and have endless admiration for the men and women whose dedication has made it such an incredible success. Its net result will be that the goal of the university, academic excellence, will be immeasurably enhanced. I question, however, the notion that all the Association's efforts ought to be invested exclusively in cultivating members for fundraising. Support? Yes. Investment? Absolutely. Exclusive focus? I don't think so.

The Alumni Association is, by charter, a volunteer, non-profit organization. The volunteer aspect is, in my view, the ingredient that makes the Association a servant of its members, not a servant of the university. The Association must have independent management, with the ability to set its own goals, if it is to be anything other than a means for the university to get at the pocketbooks of its grads.

The Association's mission statement is quite clear: we are in business to keep you connected to UBC and to support the university in the achievement of its goals. All our programs are geared to that mission. How we gear them should be the call of the members and the Board of Directors, not of the university.

The university's complaints about Association service are difficult to quantify. The Association's resources have system-

“There is little doubt that the Association ... will be fundamentally changed in the near future. The university seems reluctant to continue funding an organization as important to its goals as the Alumni Association if it cannot control its operations.”

seen as a positive element of university structure. They were able to attract high level, influential grads to deal with association business, and these grads, typically, went on to serve the university in other volunteer capacities. As community influencers, they were able to spearhead fundraising drives, champion university issues at all government levels and, generally, act as ambassadors of the university to the community. As well, independent alumni associations (like student societies) acted historically as something of a watchdog to the interests of the university as a whole. Active, highly-placed, influential grads could question administration decisions.

The University

Funding at public post secondary institutions in North America has been in crisis for two decades. The crunch of baby-boomers flooding campuses and the ever-expanding need for modern equipment, new, high-priced faculty, and innovative programming stretched finances to the limit. UBC has been no exception. David Strangway came to UBC in 1986 at the end of a debilitating period of restraint. Some buildings were in bad repair, programs were full to bursting, and faculty salary levels were some of the lowest in the country. The previous president, George Pederson, had begun planning for a full-scale fundraising campaign, and David Strangway decided to launch it.

For a campaign to be successful, all segments of the university have to be involved, and all have to be coordinated. This means that all fundraising has to be managed through a central office, that groups or faculties cannot raise money independent of each other. The Development Office and the president consulted community and corporate leaders, many of them alumni, deans, vice presidents and department heads and produced a case statement, outlining all the projects (buildings, endowments, chairs, scholarships, etc.) for which money would be raised. With few exceptions, fundraising for any other project was put on hold.

Although this stance caused some frustration on campus, it made sense. Fundraising is an art best left to those with professional skills. They have knowledge of taxes, estates and long-term giving, and can outline how particular gifts will benefit the donor nearly as much as it will benefit the university. Additionally, they can focus donors on larger issues and convince them of the value of giving more than they had perhaps planned to give in the beginning. It makes no sense for a faculty to solicit Corporation X for $10,000 for a scholarship when the professionals know they can convince the same corporation to give $100,000 or even $1 million for a special project. It does the university and students a disservice when Corporation X's giving potential is not fully realized.

A simple fact proves the wisdom of leaving fundraising to the pros: their skill and artistry has raised over $100 million from private and corporate donors since the campaign launch, and convinced the provincial government to match most of that dollar for dollar. Including the match, over $200 million has been raised to date. Even the most disgruntled will admit that such a total would have been unthinkable without a professional fundraising office.

When fundraising was removed as the Association's major focus, the university asked it to take on more 'friend raising' activities. By communicating the exciting academic, research and arts activities going on at UBC, and by cultivating interest in alumni and the community, the Association would be smoothing the way for even greater fundraising opportunities and, therefore, improving the quality of education at UBC.

But some were reluctant to give what they considered their constitutional power to the university. From early 1988 to the present, many senior volunteers put themselves in opposition to the university's administration, and challenged any policy that, in their view, affected the Association negatively. University administrators naturally became wary of the Association, and felt they could no longer count on the Association's support.

The Directional Plan

And there it stood until the Directional Plan. Indeed, 'partnership studies' were undertaken a few times, but neither side in the debate was able to arrive at a conclusion agreeable to the other.

The Directional Plan (see box page 15) aims to restructure the Association completely and make it respond directly to the needs of the university. It has yet to be approved by either the university's Board of Governors or the Association's Board of Directors, and while some Association senior volunteers are determined to fight the Plan (see Dave Coulson's column, next page), university officials are equally determined to implement some sort of restructuring by April 1, 1992, the start of the new fiscal year. Indeed, university administrators have funded their own analysis of the restructuring needs of the External Affairs Office, and other plans are under active consideration. To some, the Directional Plan does not go far enough; they feel that volunteers should have no say in directing the policies of the Association.

There is little doubt that the Association that has provided a direct link between graduates and their university will be fundamentally changed in the near future. The university seems reluctant to continue funding an organization as important to its goals as the Alumni Association if it cannot control its operations.

The outcome of this issue affects how the university relates to you, the alumni of UBC. The Association welcomes your thoughts. Please direct them to our offices (6251 Cecil Green Park Road, Vancouver, B.C., Canada, V6T 1Z1). ♦

UBC grads are conspicuous by their presence in B.C.'s new government

The new government voted into office in the October 17, 1991 B.C. election was unusual on a number of fronts. It was only the second time in nearly 40 years that the Social Credit Party did not win a majority, and over half of all MLAs in the house have university degrees. Of the 51 NDP members elected, 33 have university degrees, and 19 of those come from UBC. Eleven of the 18 cabinet members have either studied at or received degrees from a university, with 10 of those coming from UBC.

Certainly, there is no implication here that UBC will be given "most favoured university" status by the new government, but members will likely be more sensitive to the needs of post-secondary education than have been previous governments, and they will already be convinced of the importance universities have in the community.

The Chronicle attended the Open House held November 5 at the Legislative Buildings in Victoria. We diligently took photographs of all UBC grads/MLAs we could find, sipped the coffee and lemonade (pink, of course), and were surprised at all the old friends we bumped into.

Nitobe Autumn

I am the colour of fire. I am fat, with slippery, cold sides. I am handsome and bold, in my own shadowy, dappled world. I have great patience and serenity. I strive for harmony in all things. I watch the world above and beyond me with languid eyes. But I watch with great interest.

There are lovers in the garden today. On a cold autumn afternoon the man and the woman walk slowly, bright splashes of scarves and Cowichan sweaters. They have chosen the outer path of the garden and walk to the east, shoulders touching, hands interlaced. They believe they are alone, hidden from the world by thick hedges of hemlock and laurel. They have not yet seen me.

Ahead on the path the "Yatsu-Hashi," the bridge among the irises. In spring the iris blooms are cobalt blue and the pond waters rest above the flower roots. Now there are only the tall pointed green stalks rising up from the muddy ground. The air has a wet, heavy smell. Wooden planks jut to the left, right, zig-zag over to the other side of the garden.

Large round boulders ringing the edge of the main lake look as though they should be in a giant's garden. Placed with precision, they are smooth and round as a Buddha's belly.

Another visitor to the garden has arrived. Master Heron. Come to find my smaller, meeker brethren, have you? To the shadows, brothers, or better still, under the graceful arch of the "Earth Bridge," where the grey one does not swoop.

I see the lovers walking west; they have almost completed the outer circle of the Stroll Garden. Before they reach the cool cover of trees by the stream, they stop to embrace.

The woman walks ahead to cross over the stream. She steps onto the two granite slabs which serve as a bridge across the gurgling waters.

In the garden pool, dark and still, a stepping-stone releases the moon.<sup>1</sup>

She holds out her hand to her companion. A fine spray from the running water fills their lungs with fresh air. They look up to the source and see rivulets pouring down a small hill. Around the stepping-stones the water flows down into a delicate waterfall. The only sound is the trickle of water over pebbles.

They have come full circle and now stand in front of The Thatched Roof Gateway. I think they will walk in the Tea Garden next. Gardens within gardens, circles within circles, green within green within space within water. Will they never see me?

First they decide to rest in the Arbour. Brushing against their sides as they walk are spicy smelling low hedges. They reach a bench at the end of this circular path. There is a long view of lake. The main bridge's outline is growing dim in the fading light. They walk on towards the Tea House.

The house is warm with light. The lovers stop, look in, stand very still. Before them a tea ceremony is performed. A young Japanese woman kneels on a satin cushion. She bends gracefully from the waist and reaches to pick up the translucent cup. She offers it to the man sitting across from her. Her hand is creamy white, stark against the fuschia kimono. The room beckons to the strangers, promises muted voices, hot green tea, rice paper lanterns lit at twilight.

Above the house the sky darkens. A south-east wind blows off the Fraser River. The black boughs of the maple trees sway and dip. The sliding doors to the Tea House close.

Hard to see me now. Even my lovely plumed white fins are indistinct in the muddied jade water.

But wait, she has sharp eyes, she's spotted me!

Out from the murky shallows I emerge. I swim strongly, in large, looping circles. My fins like fine gauze sweep behind me. Unlike the three-colour carp around me, I am one solid blaze of red. I leave swirls of bubbles in my wake. I am.....alone.

The garden has closed for the night. I had not noticed, but

The lovers have gone home,

teacups belong

Vancouver: A Pacific Rim City in the Making

Asia has had a strong influence on Vancouver's development since the last spike.
And it's just going to get stronger.

by Michael Goldberg

Vancouver has become a media darling. In the past few years, the city has been featured in papers and magazines all over North America, and has hosted TV film crews from Hong Kong to New York and London and beyond. Even the media in eastern Canada has shown an interest in Vancouver's virtues.

Why has this former milltown been the centre of so much media interest of late? Vancouver, it seems, has become a metaphor for the way North America is being drawn closer to the Asia Pacific Region, and for how the ocean no longer acts as a barrier to movement and economic integration. The Pacific serves as both symbol and vehicle to unify the nations and economies on its eastern and western shores. Vancouver represents a prototype for this new era of trans-Pacific integration and linkage.

Given Vancouver's strategic location and superb harbour, it is not surprising that the Pacific Rim has had a huge influence on the city's history from the outset. Both national railroads had Asia as their focus, and both were built largely by Asians. Immigration flows from India and Japan at the beginning of this century forged additional early ties with Asia. Long before the Pacific Rim became a fashionable concept, Vancouver was well on its way to becoming a Pacific Rim city.

Recent immigration figures show that the flow to Vancouver keeps increasing. The 1986 census for the Vancouver Census Metropolitan Area (CMA) reveals that 135,305 people in the area (or 10%) claim Asian ethnic origin (excluding those from India and Pakistan). The 1991 census figures are not available yet, but it is undoubtedly the case that these figures have increased since 1986 both in absolute and percentage terms. For example, in 1988 of the 18,228 international immigrants to Vancouver, 12,805 (70.2%) came from Asia, with 4839 (26.5%) of these coming from Hong Kong alone.

Vancouver's demographic structure is the result of population movements between Asia (especially China and Japan) and Vancouver that go back a century: the present structure is not a new phenomenon. These migration flows provide a continuum against which Vancouver's present demographic and economic connections with the Asia Pacific region should be viewed.

During the first quarter of 1989, B.C. exported more of its goods to Asia (41%) than it did to the United States (39.8%). Also, the province's largest company, Macmillan Bloedel, sold more lumber to Japan during that period than it did to the United States, two historical firsts. Trends during the '80s suggest that these are not one-time anomalies: trade with the Pacific Rim is expected to increase as a proportion of provincial exports.

A pattern similar to that exhibited in exports is emerging in tourism. In 1978 Asian travellers represented a third of the 272,068 people entering Canada through BC. By 1988 they represented over 40% of the 591,900. While total travel increased by 118% over this period, Asian travel grew by 170%. Similarly, between 1983 and 1987 people flying from Vancouver to Hong Kong grew by 125% and to Sydney, Australia by only 39%. Fares to such established destinations as San Francisco and Los Angeles grew by less than 20%.

Changing Economy
These changes in demography, trade and travel can be seen in the dramatic changes occurring in the economy of Vancouver and B.C., and provide additional and growing links between the region and the Pacific Rim.

Tourism is now the second largest economic sector in British Columbia, having overtaken the mining sector in the late 1980s. Vancouver hotel occupancy rates (78.5% in 1989) are the highest of any other major Canadian city, and compares with occupancy rates in the 60% range for most of the two decades preceding.

Closely related to tourism and travel are the landing rights agreements which link Vancouver directly with Asia. Leading Asian carriers such as Cathay Pacific, Singapore Airline, Korean Airlines, and CAAC now fly to Vancouver direct. Canadian Airlines International and Japan Airlines have both added flights between Vancouver and Japan, while Air Canada now flies between Vancouver and Seoul.

Taken as a whole, services now account for over 80% of jobs in Vancouver, compared with just over 75% in 1981. During that period there have been major shifts within the service sector further illustrating the changing structure of the regional economy. Transportation, communications, and utilities jobs declined while jobs in finance, insurance, real estate, commercial, business and personal services grew markedly.

Thus, the 1980s saw the continued decline of traditional goods producing industries and the continued growth of service industries, particularly those high value added services in the professions. Both tourism and professional services are increasingly servicing Pacific Rim clients, and in the process building stronger and longer term ties between Vancouver and the Asia Pacific region.

The growing focus on the Asia Pacific region can be seen in the cultural, educational and research initiatives being fostered here. Asian language and culture programs in the schools aim to ensure that every secondary school graduate by the turn of the century will have had courses in Asian culture, language and history.

These school programs are supported by institutes of Asian research at B.C.'s universities, with UBC leading the way. The federally chartered Asia Pacific Foundation is also located in Vancouver and reinforces the city's primacy as a depository of Asian knowledge in Canada. The Asia Pacific Banking and Finance Institute builds on these educational and research bases.

Finally, a host of business organizations have formed recently to promote Canadian Asia Pacific trade. The Vancouver Chapter of the Hong Kong Canada Business Association, with roughly 800 members is likely second in size only to the Vancouver Board of

New Dean Lets the Secret Out: Commerce is Tops

According to Michael Goldberg, the new dean of Commerce, it's time to tell the world about one of the best commerce faculties in the country. "The faculty is, perhaps, the best kept secret in business education in Canada," he says.

It appears his claims aren't simple partisan hyperbole. In a survey done in 1986, UBC placed fourth in rank behind Western, Queen's and York. But recent rankings drawn from business school deans and faculty suggest UBC has crept up to second place behind Western.

All that is good news for Goldberg. The faculty is one of the largest: 100 academic staff provide service to over 1,600 students, and conduct some of the most dynamic research projects in Canada. And this research thrust will only grow in the coming years. One of his chief goals is to start fundraising again when the major university campaign winds down. On his shopping list are three new $1 million chairs, a number of junior professorships, and funding for renovations to the commerce building which, at nearly 20 years old, is showing its age.

Goldberg was born in Brooklyn, N.Y. in 1941, and attended school there and at Berkeley, where he received his PhD. He joined the commerce faculty at UBC in 1968 just in time to witness the student occupation of the Faculty Club. His first book (he has written or co-written nine) dealt with the differences between American and Canadian cities and why a continental urban model was inappropriate, and was a direct result of that incident: when the occupation ended, students paid for all the food and drink they had consumed. The difference between that and the events at Berkeley in the late '60s convinced him that Canada was a different place, indeed.

Since then, he has developed a strong interest in the Canada-Asia connection. He is currently working on a number of projects dealing with Vancouver and its industrial and financial relationship to other international centres.

As well as developing initiatives in fundraising and the school's visibility, Goldberg wants to improve student services and continuing education programs in the faculty. "Universities are service organizations," he says. This means increased attention to financial support and developing courses for working professionals. He is also keen to expand the international scope of programs in the faculty.

His major goal, however, is to make his the best business school in Canada, and one of the ten best in the world. The secret is out.

Trade among local business organizations. There are also Japan-Canada, Korea-Canada, China-Canada, and Taiwan-Canada business Associations, and the UBC Alumni Association has formed branches in Tokyo, Hong Kong and Singapore.

These clearly point out just how much we have become connected to the Asia Pacific region. The connections would have been even more dramatic if we could review information on investments by Asians in the Vancouver economy, not just in real estate, but in manufacturing and services as well. Since Li Ka-Shing's purchase of the EXPO '86 site in Vancouver, there has been an explosion in interest and investment in Vancouver by Asians from Hong Kong, Singapore, Taiwan and Japan. Regrettably, these data do not exist, but by all accounts these investments are significant in scale and provide long lasting ties between Vancouver and the Pacific Rim.

Vancouver is undergoing fundamental economic change. It is transforming the city from a regional service centre built on a natural resource base to an international service centre built on its location and high quality living environment. The recent demographic changes associated with increased Asian immigration are much more modest than the economic restructuring that is taking place. Present immigration patterns are really continuations of those established in the past, while the critical economic shifts are a new phenomenon. This rapid movement into uncharted economic waters is the most important issue facing the city and region in the next few years. It manifests itself in changing land uses (eg. luxury high rise condominiums and deluxe Asian hotels) and in higher residential and office densities. These physical manifestations catch the public eye and ire, while the basic underlying economic changes and opportunities elude the public view.

"Ultimately, Vancouver is in a position to show the world how to cope with dynamic economic and demographic change."

These changes are not unique to Vancouver. The Los Angeles area has experienced many of the same demographic and land use shifts, but so have other U.S. West Coast urban areas. In Canada, Toronto has received the bulk of Southeast Asian immigrants over the past decade, but none of these places have caught the media's gaze. Indeed, it is the media from many of these centres which have focused on Vancouver as a means for understanding the changes taking place in these centres. But why Vancouver?

Vancouver's transformation has been very rapid, and since Vancouver is smaller than most of the centres that send media here, the effects appear larger. Thus, the impacts seem to be more visible. However, many of the impacts attributed to the growing Asian influence in Vancouver are illusory (see below). The most likely cause of the extensive interest in Vancouver derives from how Vancouver is dealing with this growing Asian presence. Other centres are interested in how we handle ourselves in the face of this rapid change.

But how real and extensive is the Asian influence and how strong is it? The answer depends on the neighbourhood or economic sector being examined, and reveals that most of the locally held truths about Asian immigration and investment are better classified as myths. A look at a couple of examples will show where the influence has been significant and where it has been overblown and mythologized.

Given the Asian penchant for education and the importance of the extended family it is not surprising that neighbourhoods with good schools and those favoured by other ethnic Chinese immigrants should be popular. These neighbourhoods have received the bulk of recent immigrants as well as Asian investment. There is no verifiable evidence however, to show that this action has had any systemic effect on house prices.

Asian immigrants have had considerable impact on our local manufacturing sector, particularly in food processing, clothing, light manufacturing and electronics. The hospitality sector has also received considerable attention along with much publicized plans for Asian hoteliers to develop major hotel properties. Finally, real estate development has also attracted interest, not just from ethnic Chinese but also from Japanese individuals and corporations. Although Asian developers are not dominant, their role is growing and they are adding considerably to the diversity of real estate product coming onto the Vancouver market.

Those are the realities. But it is the myths that have garnered headlines here and abroad (including Hong Kong).

The most widely circulated myths relate to property markets. Asians have been accused of being responsible for our house price spirals, for destroying the city, for "Manhattanizing" it with Hong Kong densities. Associated claims include: they are buying up everything, they are all rich, and, at the rate they are going, our children will never be able to afford to live here. Finally, they do not contribute to our society, they only take or profit from it. It's important to have a close look at these claims.

There is no evidence to support these claims, newspaper headlines notwithstanding. House prices are driven by general economic conditions (which are still relatively strong here), and thus Asian buyers are not setting prices in the regional housing market. Fears of Manhattan densities are nothing new and have arisen during every economic boom and upward real estate development cycle during the past quarter century. Finally, while slow to start, members of the Chinese community are becoming leading philanthropists and business and civic activists. The myths are just that.

Vancouver is doing quite well in coping with the magnitude of changes occurring during this period of shifting ties. A number of recent developments have helped this coping process along considerably. For example: B.C.'s Lieutenant-Governor, David Lam, was born in Hong Kong and is a leading philanthropist and civic contributor. He has speaks out consistently on the strengths of immigration. The recently created Laurier Institute has initiated a number of studies to help us discuss the immigration and foreign investment issues more rationally. Strong government and business support for closer ties with Asia and for continued immigration has also helped cool passions considerably. The future looks much better than does the ill-informed recent past.

Ultimately, Vancouver is in a position to show the world how to cope with dynamic economic and demographic change, and in doing so, becoming a prototype for the future: A North American Pacific Rim City. ♦

UBC's Non-Stop Bus

by Don Wells

I first became curious about UBC's invisible man in the Fall of 1987. I was a student sports information officer working in the UBC Athletic Department under Joanne Jones, UBC's former Inter-university Athletic Director. She had just finished explaining that the roster forms I was mailing out should also be sent to Bus Phillips.

There was that peculiar name again.

Imagining a man who was either the size of a BC transit vehicle or had the roaring straight-ahead disposition of one, I finally asked the question, "Who is Bus Phillips?"

"Haven't you met Bus?," she asked surprised.

"No. I know that he has an office on campus, but I've never seen him ... I don't think."

"He's a wonderful old guy," she purred.

By now I wondered if she was about to reveal that the man was actually a favourite grandfather whose sweater emitted that special blend of pipe tobacco and Old Spice that remains in the olfactory memories of little kids forever.

"He's a real gentleman. He comes in here every now and then, usually in the morning, because I think he plays golf in the afternoons. He has silvery hair and a really soft voice. Oh, you'd like him."

Hmmm. Wonderful old guy, gentleman, soft voice. So much for names.

In the time since then I have spoken to Bus on the phone on several occasions and have written and received electronic mail messages on several others, but our meetings have been few.

We received the last memo from his office in UBC's Osborne Gymnasium with a hint of sadness. In it, he announced that this was to be his final year as the Secretary-Treasurer of the Canada West University Athletic Association (CWUAA). It will be his eleventh season in the position that he only intended to occupy for a couple of years at best. It will also be his 35th year of involvement in university sport in Western Canada.

Born in Alberta, Phillips grew up and received his education in Vancouver. He joined the provincial Department of Education in 1938 as a physical education instructor. His career was interrupted by the war and after serving four years in the R.C.A.F. he returned to take up an administrative position with the Department of Education in Vancouver. From 1949 to 1953 he served as director of the department's physical education and recreation branch.

In the summer of 1953, he was appointed as UBC's Director of Athletics and became a member of the staff of the School of Physical Education and Recreation. He served in that role for twenty-seven years before retiring in 1980.

During his time at UBC, he coached track and cross-country teams and took a special interest in track and field administration. He organized and officiated at many major meets, and served as meet manager at the 1954 Commonwealth Games. He was Secretary-Treasurer of the B.C. High School Boys' Basketball Association for 15 years.

During his competitive days as an athlete, Bus was one of B.C.'s best, excelling particularly in track and rugby. He competed successfully against some of Canada's finest British Empire and Olympic Games sprinters and middle-distance men. Playing rugby with the Ex-Britannia Club, he was selected for the Vancouver representative team on many occasions.

When he finally stepped down as director of UBC's athletic program, he agreed to take on the CWUAA secretary-treasurer's position part-time. When we met recently to talk about his career for this article, he explained that serving as secretary-treasurer had been a perfect way to retire.

"I was due to retire in 1980, but I agreed to do it for a couple of years," he said over his coffee cup. "Then UBC was kind enough to supply me with office space and things worked out very well. I was able to keep in touch with everybody. But I think the time is right to step down. Things are changing. The structure of Canada West and the objectives of the secretary-treasurer's office are changing. I'll be 77 next May and I want to turn the position over in good shape to somebody else."

Asked about the changes in Canadian university sport since 1953, he admitted that the shrinkage of programs and the apathy of students has left him disappointed. "We used to be more broad-based. We had badminton, fencing, golf, synchronized swimming, diving, wrestling and rugby ... it allowed more athletes who were competent to participate extramurally. That's not to say that programs shouldn't have been cut, I just think it's unfortunate. I like a broad-based program.

"I'm also sorry about the apathy. I still can't understand why more students don't attend (athletic events). There doesn't seem to be the loyalty and enthusiasm there used to be."

At that moment, I mentioned a 1960s photograph I had recently seen of UBC's War Memorial Gymnasium with far more people in it for a basketball game than I had ever seen before. He smiled and nodded his head in acknowledgment of an era that was obviously a memorable one.

"We jam-packed it, no doubt about it," he said. "We used to have Thursday noon hour games when we were in the old Evergreen Conference. They always drew well. After the Commonwealth Games were over, we took the

"I want to get my handicap back to what it used to be and I want to spend more time with my family ... I haven't thought of a third career yet."

3000 seats from the pool and put them on the east side of the stadium. We used to pack them too for the old Evergreen games. But there were no competing interests back then. That was before the Lions and before TV. Television took away and so did the location of the stadium after it was moved."

As he continued to talk in that gentleman's tone about some of the grander elements of a by-gone era, such as the Saturday morning classes after which Arthur Delamont's band signalled that it was game time at the old Varsity Stadium, and about how the students poured out of the buildings and headed for the bleachers, or about how Peter Mullins' basketball team beat the University of Hawaii in two straight noon hour games in front of a packed gymnasium, I couldn't help but remember how Joanne Jones had described Bus Phillips four years earlier.

Bus Phillips is a gentleman—a gentleman with a lot of happy memories of what has amounted to practically two full careers in university sport in the Canada West Conference. I asked him what he planned to do after his final year.

"I want to get my handicap back to what it used to be and I want to spend more time with my family." Then he chuckled a little. "I haven't thought of a third career yet."

We talked a little longer and then he indicated that he had a date to keep with his golf partners. I thanked him for his time and for his commitment to sport at UBC and for serving as the elder statesman of the Canada West Conference.

As he got into his car to make a 1:30 tee-off time, I secretly hoped that this was one Bus that would never stop. ♦

The University of British Columbia Prizes for Excellence in Teaching, 1992 Call for Nominations in the Faculty of Arts

Once again the University will be recognizing excellence in teaching through the awarding of prizes to faculty members. The Faculty of Arts will award five (5) prizes for excellence in teaching during the 1991-92 academic year.

Alumni are encouraged to bring their suggestions for teaching prize winners to the attention of the head of the department, the director of a school or chair of a programme in which the instructor is teaching.

Eligibility

Eligibility is open to faculty who have three or more years of teaching at UBC. The three years include 1991-92.

Criteria

The awards will recognize distinguished teaching at all levels, introductory, advanced, graduate courses, graduate supervision and any combination of levels.

Nomination Process

Members of faculty, students or alumni may suggest candidates to the head of the department, the director of the school or the chair of the programme in which the nominee teaches. These suggestions should be in writing and signed by one or more students, alumni or faculty, and they should include a very brief statement of the basis for the nomination. You may write a letter of nomination or pick up a form from the office of the Dean of Arts in Buchanan Building, Room B 130.

Deadlines

The deadline for submission of nominations to departments, schools or programmes is 30 January, 1992.

Winners will be announced in mid-May, and they will be identified as well during Spring Convocation in May.

For further information about these awards, contact your department or call Associate Dean of Arts, Dr. Sherrill Grace, at 822-9121.

Henry C. Gunning BASc(GeoEng)'23, MSc'26, DSc'67 A Remembrance

Henry Gunning was born in Belfast in 1901, the youngest of four boys. The family moved to Vancouver in 1907 where his father established a retail hardware business. He entered UBC in 1918, after attending Tecumseh Elementary and South Vancouver High School (now John Oliver). He graduated in 1923 with BASc in geological engineering. At UBC he played both varsity rugby and soccer.

He completed his post-graduate education at MIT in Boston, receiving his PhD in 1927. It was in Boston that he met his first wife Frances.

He spent each summer in the field for the Geological Survey of Canada. In 1928, after his marriage, graduation and one year's teaching at MIT, he and Frances moved to Ottawa, where he worked for the GSC until 1939.

In reading the GSC reports and memoirs of that era, one catches a glimpse of the incredible pioneering nature of the work done by these GSC geologists. They were on their own in a land of rain forests, grizzly bears and precipitous terrain, with little or no infrastructure or population. Their achievements in mapping these wild and rugged territories fill one with humility when contrasted with our comfortable circumstances of today.

In 1939, the family moved to Vancouver on Henry's appointment as professor of economic geology at UBC. Ten years later, he was made head of the department of geology and geography, and then in 1953, dean of applied science.

During his twenty years at UBC, he gained a reputation as a fine teacher and a caring administrator who took time to respond to the myriad problems faced by university students. Both at work and at home, close circles of friends evolved, and group involvements developed — both professionally and in the community. He was very active in the BC Institute of Mining and Metallurgy, the Geological Association of Canada and the Society of Economic Geologists. He was made a Fellow of the Royal Society of Canada.

He cared very much for his faculty colleagues and graduate students, many of whom went on to become faculty members themselves and close lifelong friends. He was terribly proud of their achievements.

In 1959, Henry accepted a position in Salisbury, Rhodesia (now Zimbabwe) with Anglo-American, doubtless out of a desire to get back to a more applied scientific environment for the twilight of his career. He very much enjoyed his three years in the African copper belt. Upon his departure for Africa, John Walker wrote a tribute to him which appeared in the Spring 1959 Chronicle.

He returned to Vancouver in 1961 to a private consulting practice. He was instrumental in establishing the engineering programme at the new Burnaby campus of BCIT. In 1965 he was awarded an Honorary Doctor of Science degree at the Spring Convocation at UBC.

After the death of his wife Frances, Henry re-established contact with Molly Wilcox Moberg, herself recently widowed. They were married in 1964 and spent 17 happy years together. Henry is also survived by his daughter Patricia; son Donald and his wife Patti; grandchildren David (Brenda), Michael (Rhea), Kathryn Turnbull (Jim) and Robert; three great granddaughters, two nieces and one nephew.

He taught by example the basic values of integrity, steadfastness, responsibility, modesty and above all, "doing one's best."

New Plant for Alumni

The Alumni Association, along with Bruce Macdonald, director of the UBC Botanical Garden, is pleased to announce the official Alumni Association 75th Anniversary Plant, coming soon to a nursery near you.

Penstemon fruticosus, "Purple Haze," named by the Botanical Garden through their plant introduction scheme, is a lovely variety of shrubby penstemon. In late Spring, this evergreen sub-shrub, 20 cm tall and 60 cm wide, is covered with purple flowers 3-4 cm long. It forms a solid mound of colour for several weeks and is excellent for cascading over rock walls, on well drained sunny banks and in alpine gardens.

Information on availability will be printed in the Spring issue of The Chronicle.

The Davidson Club

Alumni can also join the Davidson Club, named in honour of the founder of the Botanical Garden (1916). It was formed to provide ongoing financial support for a variety of endowments administered by the Gardens. The Gardens are internationally known and contain one of the finest collections of plants in North America.

Members get free entrance to the Gardens, use of the Gardens' library, invitations to special events and a 10% discount at the Garden shop. All donations are tax deductible, and you may stipulate which endowment your donation should go toward.

For more info, call the Botanical Gardens at (604) 822-3928.

Brother Twelve: The Incredible Story of Canada's False Prophet

by John Oliphant, BA'70,
McClelland & Stewart, 371
pages, $29.95

It's hard to pick up a newspaper or magazine lately without seeing a review, feature or excerpt from John Oliphant's new book Brother Twelve. Part of the fascination, of course, is that it's a Canadian story. This tale of high charlatanism (or high faith) happened right here in our back yard.

But the story of Brother Twelve doesn't need any nationalist tag to make it good reading: it's completely bizarre all on its own. Edward Arthur Wilson (Brother Twelve) was an English sea captain with a mystical bent who had convinced himself he would change the world. Sick and looking for direction, he spent some time in the South of France in the early '20s. There, he heard voices and saw visions that pointed to the use of ancient Egyptian deities to reach his goals.

During the next ten years he gathered followers (and their money), built a settlement in B.C.'s Gulf Islands and developed the mixture of old religions, occultism and Theosophy that became the basis of his Aquarian Foundation.

Oliphant doesn't make final judgments about Brother Twelve, but his fate, and that of his Foundation, is consistent with our experiences with the likes of Jimmy Swaggart, Bagwan Shree Rajneesh and Elizabeth Clare Prophet: ultimately, the weight of near divinity bestowed upon him by his followers became unbearable. Toward the end, Brother Twelve developed a level of paranoia. He built defences to repel invaders, turned his money into gold and hid it in glass jars, scared off visitors with rifle shot and sexually and physically abused his followers.

It's impossible to know if Brother Twelve was truly a conduit from above or another in a long line of charismatic charlatans waiting to fleece the gullible of their money and their faith. Either way, his fragile ego was unable to bear that weight. He began to believe in his own exalted persona and was overcome by the wonder of it.

The mix of narrative, diary and letter fragments and other records of the day is put together with great skill. Fascinating subject matter aside, the book is well written and fun to read. Recommended for holiday relaxation.

Sherwood Lett: His Life and Times

by Reginald Roy, UBC
Alumni Press, 180 pages,
$29.95

Reviewed by Heidi Greco

Autumn is the season for reminiscence. Even its public holidays, Thanksgiving and Remembrance Day, are traditions that are based on the gathering of memories. Many of UBC's annual fall events are rooted in the same sense of reflective tradition: the Shrum Bowl, Homecoming and the Great Trekker dinner. It seems appropriate that the Alumni Press should issue a biography of Sherwood Lett, one of the university's earliest and most eminent graduates.

Lett was a student in UBC's charter class, marched in the Great Trek in 1922, and, together with Evelyn Story (later Evelyn Lett), was among the group that founded the Alumni Association. He was also a member of the university's senate and served as chancellor from 1951 to 1957.

But the life related in the book goes far beyond the boundaries of UBC. Reginald Roy, University of Victoria professor emeritus in History, has carefully researched his material and reveals a man who distinguished himself as an athlete, and academic, a soldier, a diplomat and—in the legal profession—both as an attorney and as a judge. His interests and his abilities stretched over diverse and seemingly unconnected areas. He excelled at virtually everything he attempted.

But the Sherwood Lett portrayed in the book shows attitudes that are definitely from the past century. Part of this perception may rise from the formal style of Professor Roy, but it also comes from some of Lett's own remarks and concerns. During the '30s, for example, Lett complained to the government about cutbacks to the militia, apparently ignoring the plight of the many Canadians who

by REGINALD H. ROY

Reginald Roy's biography tracks Lett's career from his days at UBC and his time at Oxford, through his years as a lawyer and judge. It relates how he became involved in a wide range of community activities including church, athletics and especially UBC, where he served as president of the Alumni Association, a member of the Board of Governors, thirty-three years as a UBC Senator and a term as Chancellor.

Through careful use of diaries and personal correspondence, the biography takes on the flavour of the times Lett lived through, and gives the reader a strong sense of the challenges, the joys and the tragedies of his life.

Friends of Sherwood Lett, those affected by his strong personality, or those interested in the movers and shakers of B.C. history will find this book fascinating and informative.

considered the Pacific Rim to be of economic or global significance.

Lett is a contradiction in many ways, but this may be one of the factors that makes him an interesting biographical subject. Roy had a vast array of materials at his disposal (correspondence, diaries, newspaper items and more), and he likely selected those items that supported his particular vision of the man. Most biographers adopt a certain perspective about their subjects even before they start writing, and this biography is no different.

But however directed this biography may be, it does present a clear testament to a man who contributed a great deal to his country, his profession and his university. Sifting through our memories and examining our history is a venture that is always worthwhile. Taking a look at where we've been and who went before us can only help us understand where we are going. ●

When properly filled in, the letters in the box form a quotation from a book written by a UBC grad. The first letters of each clue, reading down, form the name of the author and title of the book. Solution next issue.

Complete the puzzle and return it to the Alumni office by February 3, 1992, and you may win one of 6 alumni mugs.
