Biographical Sketch

Abraham Jedidiah Rogatnick was born November 27, 1923 in Boston, Massachusetts. He interrupted his undergraduate studies to serve in the armed forces in WWII, fighting on the Western Front. He later studied in Germany on a Fulbright Fellowship. In 1948, he completed a master's in architecture at the Harvard Graduate School of Design. Rogatnick arrived in Vancouver in 1955, initially only to visit a friend but instead settling permanently. He and Alvin Balkind opened the first commercial gallery in Vancouver for contemporary art called The New Design Gallery. It was the beginning of Rogatnick's advent of contemporary west coast art for Vancouver, which also included being a founding member of the Arts Club Theatre in 1958 and serving as the interim director of the Vancouver Art Gallery from 1974-1975.

In 1959 Rogatnick was appointed to the School of Architecture at UBC, where he helped start a Study Abroad Program for students to have learning opportunities around the world. He expanded his own interests by specializing in Venetian architecture and learning Italian. He retired from UBC as Professor Emeritus in 1985.

Rogatnick served on several juries for art awards, and acted as architectural advisor for the National Gallery of Canada and the Philadelphia Museum of Fine Art. He contributed to a book regarding B.C. Binning, with whom he collaborated in the sixties and early seventies to arrange the Festivals of Contemporary Art at UBC. Rogatnick received numerous awards and honours including the Barbara Dalrymple Award for Community Service as well as an honorary doctorate from the Emily Carr Institute of Art and Design in 1999. He did some television and stage acting starting about 1998 at the age of 74. He is also memorialized with the Abraham Rogatnick Library at the Vancouver Contemporary Art Gallery, named after him for his work on the Board of Directors and his bequest to the institution. Rogatnick died August 28, 2009 at the age of 85.

Custodial History

Some of the materials were originally transferred to the Belkin Art Gallery at UBC by Scott Watson, a close friend of Rogatnick – the Belkin, in turn, transferred them to the University Archives early in 2010. The remainder were donated directly to the Archives by the executor of Rogatnick's estate.
