Administrative History

The School of Community and Regional Planning was established in 1951 and was founded by Dr. Peter Oberlander. The school is dedicated to teaching new planners the skills they need to flourish in a rapidly changing world as they ensure the viability of communities and regions through designing and planning the built environment. In addition to a few undergraduate courses, the school offers a Masters in Community and Regional Planning, a Research Masters, a Masters in Engineering Leadership (MEL) in Urban Systems and a PHD program. The school is accredited by the American Planning Accreditation Board and the Canadian Professional Standards Board.

A major unit within the school is the award-winning Centre for Human Settlements. CHS conducts policy-oriented research projects around the world centered around community development and the factors that influence a community's growth and sustainability. This unit was initially tasked with preserving the audio and video presentations by each participating nation of the UN's Habitat I (Vancouver, 1976). CHS was also founded (1977), headed, and influenced by Peter Oberlander for several decades. CHS initially reported to an interdisciplinary Board of Management chaired by the Dean of Graduate Studies, but later joined SCARP. In the 1990's the audio and video collection of Habitat I was turned over to the UBC Archives. For several years after Habitat I, CHS held bi-weekly conferences with visiting scholars and professionals in the field. Most of the speakers tied their talks directly to the goals promoted by Habitat I. Frequently, the Centre worked with the speakers to create publications of various types. CHS remains involved with the UN's Habitat events and initiatives. After the 2006 World Urban Forum III (Vancouver), the Centre developed a highly praised digital archive consisting of print and digital materials from all the Habitat events.
