First Nations Communities Research Collection / Frank Tester (collector). – 1888-2000.
3.18 m of textual records.

Collector's Biographical Sketch

Dr. Frank Tester was a professor in the School of Social Work at the University of British Columbia. His research and practice focus on community development as a means for addressing what are often taken to be personal and mental health problems. He is interested in the structural origins of social issues and the policies and practices that address them. His work focuses on collective and community development approaches to problems like young Inuit suicide, housing and living conditions, food security and the impacts – social, cultural and environmental – of resource development projects. The themes of social organizing and resistance through the use of methods like participatory action research and popular education inform his work, as do critical theories dealing with economic, social and cultural issues. While much of his research and community work currently focuses on Inuit settlements in the Canadian Eastern Arctic, he has also worked in Tanzania, Mozambique, Vanuatu in the South Pacific and Nicaragua. He also has an ongoing interest in First Nations and environmental issues. Tester is also a documentary film maker and recipient of two international awards: the Gustavus Myers Award for his contribution to human rights in North America, and the Erminie Wheeler-Voegelin Prize from the American Society for Ethnohistory, Cornell University, for Tammarniit (Mistakes); Inuit relocation in the eastern Arctic, 1938-1962 (Vancouver, UBC Press, 1994), co-authored with Peter Kulchyski, Native Studies, University of Manitoba. In the course of his career he collected publications, records, and other materials documenting First Nations environmental and political concerns, First Nations child and family welfare issues, and media coverage of these and other issues.

The collection also incorporates materials collected by Glenn Drover, former Director of the School of Social Work (1983-90), who entrusted them to Tester. Drover was an accomplished scholar and a dedicated advocate for social justice in Canada and globally. He was recognized for his lifetime contributions to Canadian social work when the annual national social worker award was re-named as the Glenn Drover Award for Outstanding Service. He worked with the Cree in the North, with youth in New York City, with people in various countries of Africa and Asia, and in a variety of social welfare programs.

Scope and Content

The collection consists of material related to Dr. Tester's and Dr. Drover's research, largely related to Canada and Canadian First Nations issues, but also including news from around the world. A large part of the fonds consists of newspaper clippings from the 1980s and 1990s, related to both Canadian affairs and global issues. Also included are copies of British Columbia provincial statutes and regulations dealing primarily with First Nations issues, and reports and other materials documenting the history of Aboriginal communities in British Columbia and throughout Canada, focussing in particular on child welfare issues.
