Biographical Sketch

Born of Cree heritage on Manitoba's Fisher Reserve in 1935, Verna Jane Kirkness attended the Manitoba Normal School graduating with a teaching certificate in 1957. She then taught elementary school in the Manitoba public school system before working as a teacher and principal in First Nations schools. From 1967 to 1970, Kirkness served as Elementary School Supervisor with Frontier School Division where she was instrumental in establishing Cree and Ojibway as the languages of instruction in several Manitoba schools. In the early 1970s as Education Directors for the Manitoba Indian Brotherhood and then the National Indian Brotherhood, Kirkness participated in the development and implementation of the Manitoba Chiefs, Wahbung: Our Tomorrows and the landmark 1972 national policy of Indian Control of Indian Education. She completed her B.A (1974), B.Ed. (1976) and Master of Education (1980) at the University of Manitoba. In 1981 she joined the faculty at the University of British Columbia where she provided leadership for the Native Teacher Education Program (NITEP) and created the Ts'kel Graduate Program. Kirkness became the first director of UBC's First Nations House of Learning in 1985 and she was also instrumental in the conception and construction of the First Nations Longhouse which opened on the campus in 1993.

In recognition of her numerous and varied contributions to Aboriginal education over more than four decades, Kirkness has received numerous awards. Amongst these are: Outstanding Educator of British Columbia award (1990), the Golden Eagle Feather Award from the Professional Native Women's Association and the Canadian Youth Education Excellence Prize as Canada's Educator of the Year.
